DON’T RUN AFOUL OF “DUCK SYNDROME”

What is it? At Stanford, one concept students become quickly familiarized with is Stanford duck syndrome. You’ve likely seen it in fellow students and colleagues here. It is when on the surface, a person appears calm because they “are floating along peacefully. However, the truth is that underneath the water the person is paddling feverishly to keep going.”

You’re not alone in your feverish paddling. Remember you have lots of support around you when that doesn’t seem true.

Creamy Coconut Vegetarian Korma

Ingredients:

- 2 medium potatoes, cut into small pieces
- 4 cups mixed chopped veggies (cauliflower, carrots, beans, bell peppers, corn and peas)
- 1 Tbsp oil
- 1 large onion, chopped
- 1-2” ginger, peeled & chopped
- 4 garlic cloves, smashed
- 1 Tbsp brown sugar (or honey)
- 1 5.5 oz can of tomato paste
- 1 Tbsp each: curry powder and garam masala
- 1 1/2 tsp each: cumin, coriander, turmeric, cardamom
- 1/2 tsp each: ground cloves, fennel, fenugreek & chili flakes
- 1 400 ml can of coconut milk
- 1/2 cup cashews
- 2 Tbsp lemon juice
- 1/2 cup yogurt

Directions:

1. Add the potatoes to a medium-sized pot; cover with water & boil for 5 minutes. Add other veggies & boil 5 more mins. Drain.
2. While the veggies cook, prepare sauce. Heat the oil in a medium-sized pot. Add the onion, and cook on medium/high for 5 minutes. Add the ginger and garlic and cook 2 minutes.
3. Remove the pot from the heat and add the tomato paste and all the spices. Stir well then return pot to the heat. When the spices are fragrant and the tomato paste caramelized, after about 1 minute, add the coconut milk, cashews, lemon juice, and 1 1/4 cups water. Let the pot boil for 5 minutes to soften the cashews.
4. Working in batches, blend the curry until it is smooth then add it back to the pot. Stir through the yogurt and brown sugar and add more sea salt, if needed. Stir the veggies into the curry and serve immediately topped with any or all toppings (cashews, cilantro, lemon, and raisins).
